Leading the industry conversation in a time of change

How can emerging AI technologies improve the work of corporate real estate professionals?

Canadian companies are using mergers and acquisitions to accelerate growth, enter new markets, strengthen capabilities and respond to a changing economic environment. At the same time, financing conditions, geopolitical uncertainty, succession planning and increased scrutiny of major transactions are influencing how deals are structured and executed. This special feature will explore the trends, strategies and partnerships shaping Canada's evolving M&A landscape.

Proposed topic highlights:

The state of Canadian M&A — The sectors, market conditions and strategic priorities driving deal activity across Canada.

Financing the deal — How banks, private capital and other financing partners are supporting acquisitions and business expansion.

Succession and consolidation — How demographic change and business-owner transitions are creating acquisition opportunities across Canada's mid-market.

Cross-border growth — How Canadian companies are using acquisitions to expand internationally and diversify their operations.

Due diligence in a changing market — How cybersecurity, data, regulation and geopolitical risk are becoming increasingly important considerations before a deal closes.

Making integration work — The strategies helping companies align people, culture, technology and operations after an acquisition.

Indigenous business growth — How partnerships, financing and ownership opportunities are supporting greater Indigenous participation in Canada's economy.
